

This Week's Walk by Margeree Edwards

Apr 9, 2021

Little Lake Cemetary

Rain, rain and everything is wet. We are grateful for the rain but it makes walking somewhat difficult.

I think I can leap large puddles with a single bound. Well, I can't. So I have my first soaker of the season.

Looking for someplace with dry walkways and no puddles, I came upon such a place right in the city.

Little Lake Cemetery is a place that some people would not know as a beautiful place to walk. The lanes are all paved or gravel, the water on three sides reflects the beautiful blue that our skies have become, there are wonderful trees bursting into leaf, and the air has a soft whiff of flowers.

Walking up the main entrance at the east end of Crescent Street (parking available) the gradual hill of the drumlin gives the feeling that a garden is opening before you. The outer layer is a large circle with many small circles within. It is a design meant for wandering.

If you prefer to look at the monuments such as angels carved out of stone or want to see the purple easy chair (yes, it is a monument) where the three roads come together, with the centre one going to the chapel at the top of the hill with roads on either side, take the road to the left and then the next road to the right. A particular monument always takes my attention. What captures yours?

Send your ideas for walks to Margeree Edwards at inmecom@gmail.com or text to 705 768 6703. Thanks.

Previous walks are at <https://peterboroughunitarian.ca/this-weeks-walk/>